What would happen if Barbara Cartland met the Marx Brothers? The Bodice Rippers is a crazy epistolary romp through the halls of academia, the hedgerows of England and the closets of the library. When sex crazed, basically virginal cousins Hortensia and Clementine Gipson set off on a search for tenure, all Hell breaks loose with baritones who might be tenors, British history that might have roots in the American deep south and deflowering that possibly needs medical insurance. There are plenty of pink fizzy drinks, inner ear problems and the kind of bodice ripping writing to make any historical fiction lover weep.

A Ripping Good Yarn!

By L. Brown

Being a friend to the authors and having read quite a few of their letter/email stories, it was with great anticipation that I began Bodice Rippers. And I wasn't disappointed!

The story seems disjointed and yet falls together in a most charming and funny way. Between the two leading protagonists, some hot guys, several accents of questionable nature and a lot of misadventure, I would have to admit this story had me literally 'lol'ing'. Seriously. Even now, almost 2 days later, I still chuckle over the line about teh security guard's mother and satan.

This story is a must for anyone with a sense of the ridiculous and a great sense of humour. The authors have both of these things in abundance and it's a great thing they are now sharing with others. Five stars ladies, five stars!
